Each of us is a personality and a part of the world as well.
But where does our «I» end and “we” begin?
Reflections on this topic in our funny photo-story.

Sometimes we want to be alone,

...at times we like to be with someone.

*Often we also enjoy
to be a part of something bigger.*

Why is that? Why do we often aspire to the contact with other people,

*...but at the same time we constantly save
our personal liberty and individuality?*

Is there any connection between our “I”...

...and
our "we"?

If so, how does it look like then?

Let's reflect on this subject a little...

In general, people are quite “multilayer” creatures.

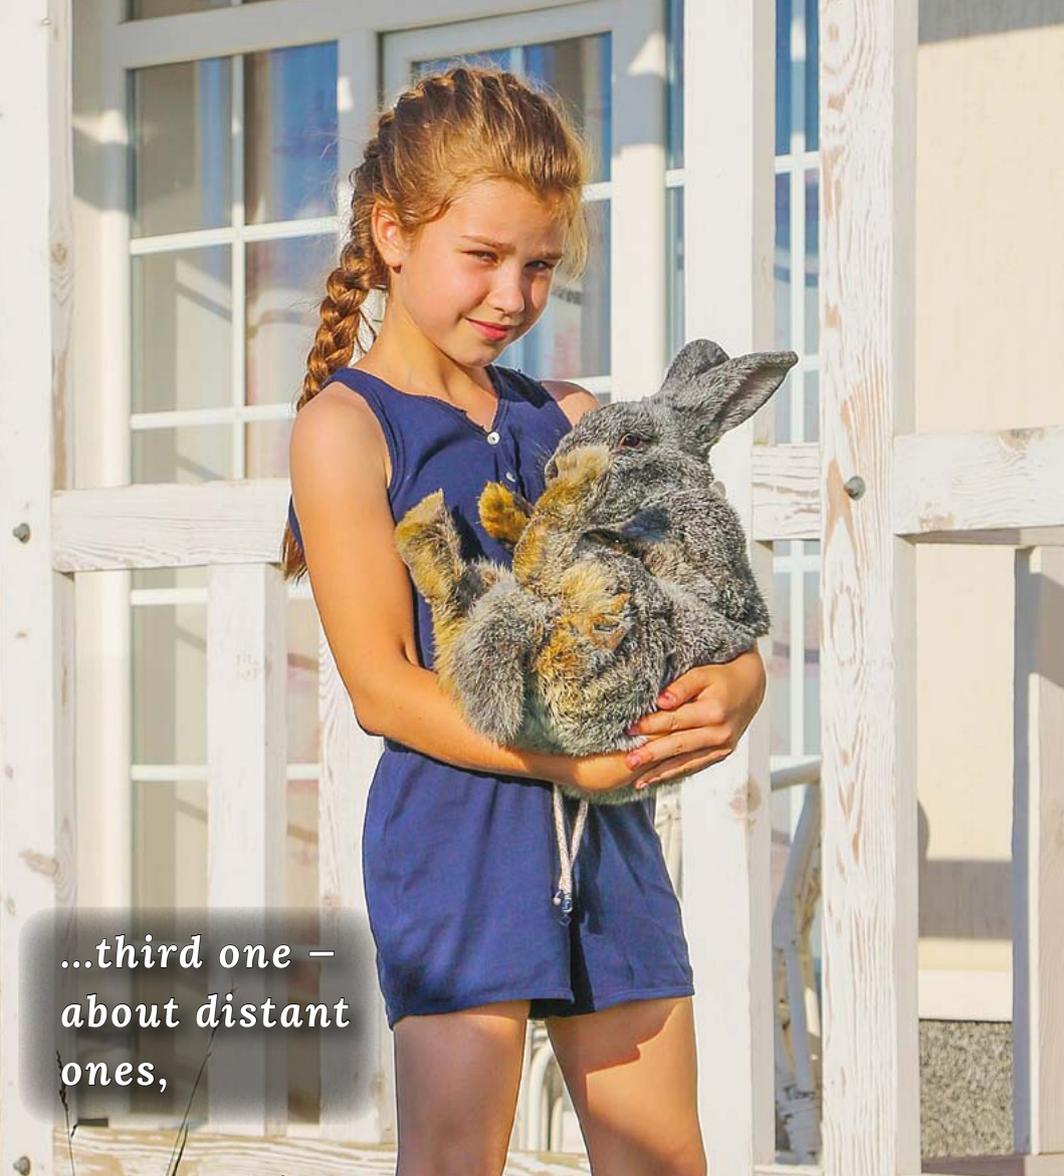

*Quite often these layers sail
in different directions.*

For example, one our part cares just about oneself,

*...another one –
about close ones,*

*...third one –
about distant
ones,*

*...fourth one (sometimes) –
about the most distant.*

*The fifth one about something else.
And so on.*

*Something,
that puts our
interests ahead
of everything,
is our “I”.*

And thoughts of others, kindness...

...or love are the parts of our “we”.

Different quantity and quality of “I” and “we” in us mainly create difference in our characters.

Our “I” is always limited only by the boundaries of our body (oh, ok, sometimes by the boundaries of our toys).

But our “we” can be much broader.

*Our personality, for sure,
may give us some pleasure.*

*However,
communication
with other people
is always important
for us to feel happy.*

*Without doubts,
our “I” is very significant.*

Furthermore, only a personality can reflect on the whole.

*For example, reflect that “two”
is always funnier than “one”...*

...or that “we” are just a lot of similar “I”...

...or that all together we can look very beautiful!
